The New Institute Conductor.

The position as Institute Conductor made vacant by the election of Mr. W. J. Brier to the presidency of the Normal School has been filled by the election of H. A. Adrian of the Edgerton High School.

Mr. Adrian is a graduate of the Modern Classical Course of the Wis. State University and comes to his new position highly recommended by the leading educators of the State.

He has had a broad experience as a teacher, having taught in all grades from the country to the High School which experience has given him the kind of knowledge needed by every Institute Conductor.

His work, too, in the Institute has been of high quality and was the chief factor considered by Pres. Brier in making his nomination to the Board of regents.

It is of no little importance that Mr. Adrian was selected from a large number of applicants, among whom were city and county superintendents, High School principals, and Doctors of Philosophy.

In the short time that Mr. Adrian has been doing actual service in the Normal School, he has gained a strong hold upon his classes and won the confidence and respect of all with whom he has come in contact. Much satisfaction is expressed that the position has been filled by so able and competent a man.

“With W. J. Brier in the presidential chair and H. A. Adrian as institute conductor, a bright future opens to the River Falls State Normal School.”—

Death of Mrs. Peckham.

Again the Death Angel has been in our midst, this time bearing away the beloved mother of two of our Normal School teachers, Misses Laura and Lucy Peckham. Mrs. Peckham had been in failing health for several years, but her decline had not been alarming till within the last few weeks, and not until a few days before her death, did the end seem near. On Saturday she was as well as usual during the early part of the day, but near its close a sudden change in her condition took place and she sank very rapidly till Sunday afternoon, when she peacefully and painlessly fell asleep to awaken no more amid the scenes of earthly life.

During her last days she was surrounded by the members of her entire family whose loving ministrations were unceasingly exerted to comfort and sustain her until her freed spirit took its flight. Her attachment to her home was very strong and this breavement falls upon the family with all the anguish that the loss of a mother can bring. Mrs. Peckham had resided in River Falls scarcely more than a year, but her gentle loving nature had won for her many friends, whose sympathy is tenderly bestowed upon the circle of loved ones who sit in sorrow beside her vacant chair. Accompanied by several members of her family her remains were taken to her old home at Neenah for burial.

A NORWEGIAN CHRISTMAS STORY.

Christmas prize story by Bessie Rounsevell.

Mabel Kempter was a girl of eighteen, teaching her first school up among the pine woods of Wisconsin. Her pupils were all Scandinavians except five. She boarded with a Norwegian family by the name of Iverson. She was nearly eighty miles from home, thirteen miles from any station, and Christmas was drawing near. Could she stay there with no hope of getting home until midwinter? "I will" she said and "I'll have a good time too and see how these people spend Christmas." So she buried her longing for home and was astonished to find out how much there was about her of interest.

Early one morning about a week before Christmas, Mr. Iverson went to town to get some wheat ground. When he returned, Alma, his little daughter three years old, was watching for him. "Oh, papa, did you bring me some candy?" she cried as he came in. "No, not this time" he replied. "Didn't you bring me anything, papa?" In answer he pulled out a bag and she was soon engaged in discovering its contents. But the string was hard to untie, and she grew impatient, jerked the string and out rolled several rosy apples. Then there was a scramble and her seven-year old brother Sewell captured two. "Sewell, you're a naughty boy. Papa brought them to me and you can't have them." she cried angrily. And then there was a wail interrupted by their father. "Alma and Sewell, you must be good children. Santa Claus might be looking in at the windows. If you are naughty children, he won't send you any nice presents, but he will send a good switch for papa to whip you with. Now, Hush!" Quiet ensued, and the family gathered around the table for the evening meal.

Normal Students and Teachers can have their eyes examined

"Wont you have some of this fish, Mabel? You haven't seen any of this kind before have you?" said kind Mrs. Iverson. "Oscar got some at the store the other day." "How nice it is!" replied Mabel. "What do you call it, Mrs. Iverson?" "Well I don't know what to call it in English. We have lots of it in Norway. Everyone for miles around gets some just before Christmas. It is dried so hard that an axe is needed to break it, and it might be kept easily for ten years. We soak it in water, cook it in lye, and then soak it in water again, for about a week. We then cook and season it for the table. I am going to make some jule öl (yule ale) to-morrow. Would you like to see how I make it?" "Indeed I should, Mrs. Iverson." "I don't know as you will like it, Mabel. Not all Norwegians do, but everyone makes some at this time, for you know yule lasts thirteen days, and the families of the neighborhood go around exchanging visits, so we always have to have something special prepared for them."

The next day Mrs. Iverson made her jule öl. She brought out a large iron kettle and put it on the stove; Into it she put molasses, sugar, water and a bag of hops. She boiled this mixture for quite a while, and then set it away to cool. Mabel was doubtful about how she would like the taste of this ale; but she decided to suspend judgment until she had tried it.

As Christmas drew nearer, the attendance at school decreased quite noticeably, for the children all had to help in making the preparations for yule. Even the youngest children stayed at home to take care of the babies while the older ones were at work. At last the day before Christmas only six young pupils greeted Mabel at nine o'clock, and she decided that it would be a waste of time to keep them all day. Accordingly she dismissed them at noon with a "Merry Christmas."

As she walked to Mr. Iverson's, a little feeling of homesickness crept over her, but Alma met her at the door, and "Oh, teacher," she cried, "we are going to have a Christmas tree, and we're going to have it upstairs, and papa's going to put some candles on it, and then Santa Claus is going to come, and—Oh, won't it be fun? Is Santa Claus going to bring you something too? I wish he would hurry up." Mabel laughed. "Are you sure he will bring you something, Alma?" "Why, yes, for I've tried to be good. Don't you think he will?" she added, as she thought of how she and Sewell had quarreled. "Oh yes I am sure he will" replied Mabel. "But is Oscar going to town? Here he is now! May I go to town with you, Oscar?" inquired Mabel. Yes, if you are ready. Jump in!" And away they went.

A warm supper was awaiting them when they got home. As soon as the evening work was done, Mabel called the children into the sitting-room, for she wanted to give Oscar and his parents a chance to prepare the tree. Sewell drew a chair to her side and Alma climbed into her lap, while both begged for a Christmas story. Then Mabel told them the old, old story of the Christ-child. How the angels came and told the shepherds that the Saviour had come, and how the wise men came from countries far away to the east, bringing rich and costly presents. As she told the story, she forgot her surroundings and thought only of that first wonderful Christmas-time, while Alma and Sewell listened in rapt attention. Just as she had finished her story, Oscar came to the door and announced that Santa Claus was coming, for he heard the jingle of the bells. Away upstairs they all trooped, and there stood the tree with its twinkling candles. They heard the bells come nearer, and soon Santa Claus himself appeared. It was late when the house was quiet that night.

Everyone was up before daylight the next morning, the sleigh was brought to the door. With a torch in hand they all got in, and were soon on their way to church. At every farmhouse others joined them, till at last a long procession arrived at the church with torches burning and crackling. After the short service was over, there was a race for home, for an old proverb says that he who arrives at home from church first on Christmas morning, will keep ahead of his neighbors in his work all the year. Breakfast was soon ready and it was with difficulty that the children were persuaded to eat, there was so much to talk about.

Mrs. Iverson had invited her father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Swanson, her brothers, Gustav, Edward, and Ole, and her sister Anna to spend the day with her family. They had a typical Norwegian Christmas dinner. A large dish sat in the centre of the table and near it was a cylindrical brown cheese. At each place was a plate of soup made of raisins and tapioca. The table also held boiled potatoes, pork-roast, biscuits, head-cheese, cake, coffee and jule ol.

In the afternoon the older people talked over the crops, the latest news, and the plans for the week. The children amused themselves with their presents, while the young people walked about two miles to the home of four of their acquaintances.

The evening was spent in playing games, cracking nuts and pulling candy. When Mabel and her friends at last parted, Gustav said "Look out for the Christmas fools this week. They may call on you." Wondering at his words, she entered the house.

The next week Mabel taught as usual, and it seemed to her that the work of the school-room was done better and more smoothly than ever before. The children were all in a happy frame of mind and were anxious to please her.

More than two weeks went by and Mabel had seen no signs of the Christmas fools. Friday evening she was very tired, and was dozing in a rocking-chair by the fire, when she was aroused by a thundering knock at the door. "What is coming? Is someone trying to burst in the door?" she thought. Mrs. Iverson opened the door, and in tramped twenty or twenty-five figures dressed in grotesque clothing. All wore masks, some merely of black cloth with slits for the eyes, nose and mouth. Several had pieces of gunny-sacking tied over their shoulders with bag-strings.

The leader carried a long birch pole in his hand. One by one the party marched up to Mabel, shook hands with her, said a few words, and passed on.

Mrs. Iverson, Oscar and Mabel tried to determine who the maskers were. Three of them looked as if their feet were rather small for their shoes, and these figures refused to speak. The others tried to draw the attention away from this trio by dancing around the room, and making a good deal of noise.

Mrs. Iverson brought out a dish of apples, the company helped themselves, each one stowing an apple in a sack which he carried, and which was already partly filled, and in two minutes they were gone. For quite a while their shouts were heard as they went down the road to the next farm-house.

And so the last of the yule festivities was over; for

"Tovende dag Knut

Danser julen ud."

(The twentieth day Knute dances yule out.)

Ex-Pres. Parker and wife left River Falls Tuesday afternoon Nov. 8, to spend the winter in California. The Normal school closed on that day at 3:00 P. M. to permit the students to go down to the train. Many of the high school pupils and townspeople were also present. We hope to see him return to us, when the winter is passed, restored to health.

KINDERGARTEN.

At the reopening of the Normal School, September sixth, the second year's work of the Kindergarten began under the direction of Miss Lucy Peckham.

The kindergarten room is situated in the North East corner of the basement and is very roomy and attractive with white swiss draperies at the windows and cabinet doors, a piano, two beautiful Madonna pictures and wheat and bitter-sweet decorations upon the walls, autumn's symbols. There are forty-two children enrolled; many of the oldest children were the kindergarten 'babies' of last year and as they ask why "Miss Vida" "Miss Cymbria" or "Miss Grace" "don't come to kindergarten?" perhaps it would be of interest to the 'grown up children' to know that Miss Barager is in Duluth and will do substitute kindergarten work for the present, Miss King is in Cincinnati, Ohio, attending the Kindergarten Training School, and Miss Daniels and Miss Jenson are in Minneapolis taking advanced kindergarten work under the direction of Miss Wood, the delightful story-teller, who gave a lecture here last year. Miss Grace Lusk has charge of a kindergarten at Mondovi, Wisconsin, and Miss Johnson is one of the five girls who are taking the kindergarten training in the River Falls Normal this year, the other four being Miss Pauline Coggeshall, Misses Lulu and Anna Fortune and Miss Thelander. The work of the kindergarteners consists of a half day's practice in the kindergarten, nature study under the direction of Miss Hatheral, water-color painting with Miss Pardee, kindergarten music and songs with Mrs. Thatcher, and kindergarten Theory and Practice under the direction of Miss Lucy Peckham. The autumn work of the kindergarten began with the thought of love, mother love, family love, and home, the comforts of home, food, clothing and shelter. We next talked of the bird family, dividing the family into two groups, summer and winter birds, thus leading up to October's thought, "The Preparation for Winter," taking first the trees, showing how the mother-tree puts the coats on the baby buds to keep them warm during the winter, how the wind carries the leaves down to the ground to cover and keep warm "the dear little violets" and other flowers before Jack Frost comes with his ice and snow. This thought of preparation for winter is carried out in many ways, the farmer is digging potatoes and putting them into the cellar, plowing the fields and taking the wheat to the mill in order that we may have flour, the mother is busy getting ready for winter, cleaning house, making warm clothes for the children and putting up fruit and jelly, and the mamma, papa and baby squirrels are busy carrying nuts to their home before Jack Frost comes with his blanket of snow to cover them up. The thought is carried out by means of talks and stories, songs and games both in the kindergarten circle and at the tables by means of the gifts and "occupations." The aim of the kindergarten is to have the children happy and contented, kind and thoughtful of others, "to learn to do by doing" and to do right for rights sake, and the aim seems to have been realized, at least in part, for a little golden haired girl said the other day "that she wished she might stay longer for she had had such a happy time." We hope in a short time to have the first of a series of mother's meetings at which "The Influence of Music" will be considered.

The first of the series of Mother's Meetings was held the last week in October and was well attended, the subject discussed was "The Influence of music" after which the mothers joined with Mrs. Thatcher and the kindergarteners in singing one of the favorite kindergarten songs. The next meeting will be held in December at which the thought to be considered will be "The Christmas Spirit."

The Kindergarten department of the N. E. A. was well attended this Summer.

Over two hundred Kindergarteners registered representing fifty-three towns or cities. There was a large delegation of colored Kindergartens present, The program was as follows.

Miss Elizabeth Harrison of the Kindergarten College, Chicago.

"The value of the ideals set forth in the Mother Play Book." Children Gardens, was the subject of a paper by Dr. Jenny B. Merrill, Supervisor of New York City public Kindergartens.

Miss Marie Ruef Hofer, "A Child's Song," After the short paper Miss Hofer sang several typical kindergarten songs.

Miss Susan Pollock principal of the Froebel Institute of Washington, discussed "Ideal play in the Kindergarten."

After the first session the visiting Kindergarteners were given a reception and lawn party—an exhibit of Kindergarten games was given on the lawn by the Kindergarteners.

Mr. Louis Solden, superintendent of St. Louis public schools, and Lord Chancellor by virtue of friendship to the St. Louis Kindergarten, spoke on "The influence of the kindergarten upon the public schools." Mrs. Marie Kraus Bocete, of

New York, "The development of the inner life of the child."

Mrs. James L. Hughes of Toronto, closed the programme by "A Kindergarten Message to Mothers."

SCIENCE.

Liquefied Air.

Air, to be liquefied, is simply compressed by a pressure of thirty-nine atmospheres and then cooled to -140° Centigrade. This is a recent accomplishment on account of the inability, heretofore, of lowering the temperature to the necessary point. Until lately -95° C was the lowest temperature attainable. During the last ten years apparatus has been devised by Carl Linde, Dr. Dewar, C. E. Tripler, and others, by which -200° C is easily reached. By Tripler's invention air to be liquefied is subjected to a pressure of 2000 pounds to the square inch, then part of this air is allowed to escape into a large receiver through which a coil of metallic tubing is passed; the remainder of the air passes through this metallic tubing. The expansion of the air in the receiver absorbs heat from the air still under pressure in the tube until so low a temperature is reached (about -140° C) that the compressed air turns to liquid.

This liquid, when exposed to the air at ordinary pressure and temperature, boils violently, for ordinary temperature (23° C) is over 200° C above the boiling point of the liquid. If a drop of this liquid be let fall upon a cake of ice it will bound off like water from a red hot stove, for ice is 190° C (about 340° F) hotter than the liquid. Tin when cooled in this liquid becomes as brittle as glass.

To manufacture a cubic foot of this liquid (about $7\frac{1}{2}$ gallons), requires the condensation of 748 cu. ft. of air. Mr. Tripler's plant manufactures 30 to 40 cu. ft. of liquid air per day.

This liquid turns to gas so rapidly and with such force that it may be used as a substitute for explosives. Another use is the separation of oxygen from the air (N_4O). By slow evaporation most of the nitrogen is driven from the air and nearly pure oxygen remains.

A large number of students were present at the meeting last Tuesday, at which time Mr. McIntosh talked on "The Bible in our hands." This topic will be considered again at the meeting of November 29. It is hoped that many will avail themselves of these opportunities for learning more about the Book of books.

At the Iowa State Normal School at Cedar Falls, there are nearly 700 young men and women enrolled in Bible classes.

Miss Effie K. Price, College Secretary of the International Committee, says, "God will not be able to use us during three summer months if He has been unable to use us during the pre-

Christmas Thoughts.

"Glory to God in the Highest,
On earth peace, good will toward men,"
Sang the angels of the heavenly host
To the shepherds at Bethlehem.

Is the heavenly host still singing?
Can you hear the angel say,
"Christ the Lord is born anew Upon this Christmas day?"

Are you thinking of the Christ Child?
Who in the manger born, Brought, "Peace on earth, good will toward men,"

On that first Christmas morn?

Listen to the angels speaking,
When you hear that still small voice,
As he pleads with you beseeching
To make His way your choice.

Leave the old and wicked past.
With brighter things in view,
Do the right and hate the wrong,
Then will Christ be born anew.

When the Christmas bells are ringing,
On the coming Christmas morn,
They will say to you then surely,
"Christ the Lord to-day is born."

—C. W. Rand.

When someone does a kindness to you
upon your way,
Take care that in your memory that friendly deed shall stay;

Each helpful word, each loving gift that others give to you, Remember with a grateful mind and thanks both kind and true.

But if you do a kindness to others as you go,
The sooner you forget it the sweeter it will grow,

Leave others to remember it; press onward
as you ought;

And love your best, and give your best,
without a backward thought.—Selected.
